New Canadian play is a psychologically thrilling drama written, directed and produced by University of Calgary alumni Andrew Kooman, Stephen Waldschmidt and James Popoff.

Calgary, Alberta (April 28, 2015)—The highly anticipated new play by University of Calgary alumnus Andrew Kooman will be in Calgary May 13-23 at the Pumphouse's Joyce Doolittle Theatre as part of its World Premiere tour. We Are the Body is a psychologically thrilling drama that explores the lives of three prisoners of conscience in Communist Europe in the 1950s.

"Calgarians have really embraced my work and I'm excited to offer audiences another compelling night of live theatre," says the award winning playwright of She Has A Name which received critical acclaim both when it premiered in 2011 and toured Canada in 2012, frequently playing to sold out audiences.

Imprisoned in solitary confinement behind the Iron Curtain of post-war Romania, Elsie's (Heather Pattengale) only companions are two other tortured prisoners Richard (Tim Bratton) and Micah (John McIver) whom she cannot touch, speak to or see in person. Both Pattengale and McIver are Calgary-area actors. In 2013, Pattengale was nominated by the Calgary Theatre Critics' Awards for best solo performance in Badger by Theatre BSMT.

From the confines of their lonely cells, as they await their nearly daily punishment, Elsie, Richard and Micah secretly tap out messages to each other in Morse Code. These sounds trigger memories from their lives before the war so that the past and present collide in a heart-wrenching and occasionally humorous way.

"The characters in We Are the Body, though they remain confined in subterranean cells, go on a spectacular journey. Traveling in and out of time, they are caught somewhere between the terrible facts of their imprisonment and the beautiful memories of better times as they are pushed through their suffering towards the truth of who they are and what they ultimately believe," comments Kooman.

As the narrative throttles toward its shocking conclusion, the forbidden communication among Elsie, Richard and Micah becomes a survival strategy as they cling to the faint hope of escape or release.

We Are the Body is based on real events from the recent past. The decisions the characters must make and the realities they face are devastatingly relevant,” says Stephen Waldschmidt the play’s director and a U of C alumnus, who was struck by the subject matter of Kooman’s newest play. Waldschmidt also directed She Has A Name.

For Elsie, Richard and Micah, the choice presented to them by their captors is to turn in their friends, give up names and betray people they love in order to end their very real and terribly visceral suffering. But in order to enjoy a future of freedom—without torture—they must imagine a life without their very personal faith.

Committed to the creation of new works of Canadian theatre, Calgary-based Burnt Thicket Theatre has brought new plays to audiences across Canada since 2007. “Audiences in Calgary have been incredibly supportive of our work and we’re thrilled to bring this timely and powerful new Canadian play to Calgary by producing We Are the Body,” says Waldschmidt.
